Disregarded is an adult Lord of the Flies set in the workplace. The author alternately experiences the relentless lows of organizational life and the renewal of being in community during a two-year retreat program. The tension between the two experiences fuels the search for understanding. Why do groups split? How can groups hang together? A rare mix of authoritative resources and personal experience in story form Disregarded explains how the personal and organizational intersect. This engaging account is nothing less than a story of hope amidst power plays, bureaucratic impediments and conflicted relationships.
