Not illustrated. 1900 Excerpt: ...be a deterioration in the cane from such practices. Yearly it has studied both yields and chemical analyses, and two years ago, such canes pedigreed for eight years, were made the subject of special scientific study by Dr. J. L. Beeson in our laboratory, and his report upon the same appeared in Bulletin No. 38. The object of all these investigations was to test the matter thoroughly and decide whether our planters could not safely use the upper third of their entire crop for seed, instead of one-fifth of their entire cane, as is now being done. In every sugar growing country, save Louisiana, tops are used for seed. The practice is strongly condemned here by some, upon reasons drawn from known principles of vegetable physiology. The cane, they say, has only a few fertile flowers and consequently depends, for propagation, upon the eyes or buds. In all seed-bearing plants, those seed germinate and fructify best which are permitted to reach perfect maturity. Therefore, in imitation of this natural law, we must seek that part of the stalk which contains the largest and best developed eyes in order to secure seed which will produce the most vigorous plants. It is further claimed that where tops are universally used as seed a degeneracy of the seed will follow, since the latter is always reproduced with these parts of the cane where the juices are poorest in nourishment (sugar) and the eyes most imperfectly developed. Hence, it is a practice with some of our planters never to plant fall cane until the polariscope shows at least 10 per cent, sugar in the cane. Per contra, there are others who claim that the planting of the tops is justifiable from purely scientific reasons, besides the economy involved. They regard the cane planted as "cuttings" rather th...
